Dale Collier

A graduate of Griffith University, Queensland in 2010, Dale Collier is currently living in Newcastle and reading for his PhD. He is an interdisciplinary arts activist, who works with new media, performance, installation and live arts in an attempt to provide a platform for an amplified experience of collective memory-making. His passion for interdisciplinary arts practice is influenced by issues surrounding national identity and spaces between public and private spheres. Collier is particularly interested in creative processes through which these issues can be explored and further understood.

As a local artist with an all-inclusive approach towards the relationship between technological arts practice and community-cultural development, he is highly optimistic about the animation of visual arts and cultural practice.

In an exploration of digital ethics and domestic ritual, his work invites the audience to participate by navigating the memory minefield in a space between.
